Do you think you know basketball? Do you think you know it well enough to take the court as an NBA or NCAA referee and accurately make the really tough calls? Well, here's your chance to prove how much you really know about the history and rules of one of the world's most popular sports. You're the Basketball Ref, newly updated with a dozen fresh scenarios, is designed to inform, challenge, and entertain basketball fans. A brief introduction to the history of basketball is followed by an overview of NBA and NCAA matters. Topics range from situations that typically come up in games—traveling and shot clock violations, for example—to rules that are just a bit more unusual or, for the casual fan, more obscure. Then quiz yourself on what call you would make in each scenario! Many of the situations in You're the Basketball Ref come from real games, but some scenarios are made up to illustrate specific points or rules. So don your stripes, grab your whistle, and take your position on the court. After all, you're the ref!

The Perfect Score Project Harmony

The Perfect Score Project is an indispensable guide to acing the SAT - as well as the affecting story of a single mom's quest to light a fire under her teenage son. It all began as an attempt by Debbie Stier to help her high-school age son, Ethan, who would shortly be studying for the SAT. Aware that Ethan was a typical teenager (i.e., completely uninterested in any test) and that a mind-boggling menu of test-prep options existed, she decided - on his behalf -- to sample as many as she could to create the perfect SAT test-prep recipe. Debbie's quest turned out to be an exercise in both hilarity and heartbreak as she took the SAT seven times in one year and in-between "went to school" on standardized testing. Here, she reveals why the SAT has become so important, the cottage industries it has spawned, what really works in preparing for the test and what is a waste of time. Both a toolbox of fresh tips and an amusing snapshot of parental love and wisdom colliding with teenage apathy, The Perfect Score Project rivets. In the book Debbie does it all: wrestles with Kaplan and Princeton Review, enrolls in Kumon, navigates khanacademy.org, meets regularly with a premier grammar coach, takes a battery of intelligence tests, and even cadges free lessons from the world's most prestigious (and expensive) test prep company. Along the way she answers the questions that plague every test-prep rookie, including: "When do I start?"... "Do the brand-name test prep services really deliver?"... "Which should I go with: a tutor, an SAT class, or self study?"... "Does test location really matter?" ... "How do I find the right tutor?"... "How do SAT scores affect merit aid?"... and "What's the one thing I need to know?" The Perfect Score Project's combination of charm, authority, and unexpected poignancy makes it one of the most compulsively readable guides to SAT test prep ever - and a book that will make you think hard about what really matters. Journal of Health, Physical Education, Recreation Wolters Kluwer This updated edition provides a firm foundation of basic measurement concepts in an interactive and user-friendly text. The authors present the techniques critical to helping students determine how to measure, collect and analyse valid and objective information.

Now retired, author Dr. Steven Bentley was a successful emergency physician. But his path in life wasn't always an easy one. In Poor No More: An American Dream, he shares his story of how he survived a rare birth defect, abject poverty, an alcoholic mother, a KKK father, an abusive children's home, and a cruel step-mother. This memoir tells how Bentley emerged from a difficult childhood and adolescence to practice ER medicine during a time of enormous change in the field and how he developed a lifelong love affair with his chosen profession. He discusses how he found it gratifying to apply his medical knowledge and to impact someone's life for the better. He relays a host of stories from both his personal and professional life, detailing the trials and tribulations and the challenges and rewards. Poor No More: An American Dream describes Bentley's journey to escape his roots and become a successful doctor in America. It tells about one man who lived in and through some interesting times.

Just as comprehension strategies have helped millions of students learn to read like proficient readers, they can also help students think like effective test takers. The authors show how students can use questioning, mental images, inferring, synthesizing, background knowledge, determining importance, and monitoring to understand the genre of tests and to think through the problems they are given. Instead of spending time on artificial and disconnected activities to cram for upcoming tests, students learn skills and strategies that will serve them throughout their school careers and beyond.

This study examined the knowledge, skills, experience, and abilities of amateur (grade school-high school) basketball officials in the State of Ohio. It investigated novice/expert skill and age differences in officiating. Another issue explored was the identification of a core skill used by expert officials. Variables of interest were knowledge, procedural performance, age effects, mediation of age effects, and anticipation (as the identified core skill). Forty high school basketball officials participated in the study: 25 were experts and 15 were novices. Experts had 10 or more years officiating high school basketball and novices three or less years officiating high school basketball. Age was defined as older officials being [greater than or equal to] 37 years of age and young officials were [less than or equal to] 36 years. The study required participants to view DVD scenarios of actual varsity state championship basketball games and make the correct basketball call. After viewing DVD scenarios they had to answer questions in relation to the call made. Using different DVD scenarios a participant would view a portion of the game scenario and it would be stopped part way in the action. Then the participant would have to tell the researcher what he/she thought would happen next (anticipation). The DVD scenario would be started again and how well the participant anticipated what happened was determined. Participants answered questions from written basketball vignettes situations, a test of the rules, and a test of the mechanics of basketball. Participants had to recall and physically demonstrate the hand signals used to officiate basketball. Test of fluid (Cultural Fair test of "g") and crystallized abilities (Mill-Hill Vocabulary Test) were administered. Results from the all tests indicated that expert officials recalled significantly more information than novice officials about other plays, specific game situations, and refereeing the defense/offense. Experts were significantly more aware than novices of their own position on the court and their area of responsibility. When the amount of information given to experts decreased, their performance in making correct calls significantly increased. Experts were better able to anticipate players' movements than novices. Experts made significantly more predictions about anticipation of players' movements as complexity level increased. Experts recalled and demonstrated more hand signals than novices. Older officials had significantly more correct calls on the DVD scenarios of game situations, recalled and demonstrated more hand signals, and significantly reported watching a court area than young officials. Experience was found to mediate age effects on performance, age was found to predict crystallized abilities above any expertise effects, and anticipation was found to be a core skill for expert basketball officials in this study.
